Subject: In regards to the redress scheme.

To whom it may concern,

I am speaking out for all the victims of child abuse, I am also a victim and I am disappointed in the Catholic Church in the way they have treated victims and offered them a pittance in compensation. I Question the justice in their actions and my argument is that all victims of child abuse should receive a large sum of compensation and I would just like to say thank you to the royal commission for fighting for all the victims. I am 44 years of age and I am on a disability pension and the abuse I suffered as a child has had damaging affects on my life, don't have a partner, no children , no career and feel suicidal at times. I would get great satisfaction if there was a redress scheme and all victims finally got justice because they at least deserve that as it's about time the church and other organisations took responsibility for the actions such as covering up for offenders of child abuse. For example when someone is in an accident they get fair compensation , why is it any different for a young child who has been sexually abused within the church to only be offered a pittance in compensation?
